WHO ARE YOUR HEROES?

Last November I was invited to speak at the annual meeting of the Norwalk Community College Foundation in Norwalk, CT. I am a 1971 graduate, and the first recipient of a scholarship I endowed in my step-father's name would be attending.

JEFF RUBIN

I struggled with my short speech (they gave me only five minutes; those of you who know me know how difficult that would be); how could I say something meaningful in so short a time?

The night before my talk I began reminiscing about my experiences at NCC, which held its classes from 3:30-10 p.m. because it shared a building with a high school, and the speech sort of wrote itself. I closed my eyes and saw the images of the people there who affected my life, and knew that recognizing them for the roles they played in my success would be the right thing to do.

I titled my speech, "Who are your heroes?" and spoke of how, when I was young, my heroes had names like Mays, Tittle and Frazier. But I was
